Dear Ms. Prenskey:

The Jewish Museum in Berlin welcomes its affiliation with such a worthwhile cross-cultural initiative such as The Inextinguishable Symphony Project. The Museum was delighted to have you and Mr. Goldsmith speak at the Museum and we hope to continue to build our relationship throughout the life of the Project.

As the Project focuses on Germany's cultural understanding and deep-rooted commitment to music and the arts, we believe individuals and organizations as well as German companies will benefit from sponsorship of this Project, as it offers a wonderful glimpse of the connective power of the human spirit as well as showcases the positive outcomes of German culture in the world. Similarly, we understand this Project is not a story of war, but rather a story of survival and peace. The experience of the artists of the Jüdische Kulturbund is a positive and uplifting examination of prewar German life in the 1930s and how those lives are connected still today around the world to their cultural roots in Germany. The Jewish Museum welcomes and applauds this new historical perspective, as well as shining light on the performing arts from this time in German culture and history.

The Inextinguishable Symphony Project's elucidation of the Jüdische Kulturbund is exceptional. Many Germans, as well as global citizens, know very little of the Kulturbund, and will learn not only about the past, but understand how each one of us today can benefit from the example of the Kulturbund artists lives.

The Jewish Museum is proud to be associated with a Project that seeks to illuminate an important piece of German cultural history while simultaneously building a stronger cooperation amongst Jews,

Germans and Americans around the globe.

Sincere regards,

Cilly Kugelmann, Vice Director
The Jewish Museum, Berlin
